All eyes on the upcoming Multiannual Financial Framework

The negotiations for the post-2027 Multiannual Financial Framework (MFF) are already at the centre of EU discussions. This issue is particularly relevant for civil society organisations (CSOs) to engage in, in a context where CSOs are constantly challenged, by a shrinking civic space across the EU and difficulties securing funding. The EU4Health grants for CSOs are still not published for this year, the LIFE grants have been facing disinformation attacks, and there are risks of spillovers to other funding programmes. The global situation with the cuts on USAID is impacting both civil society organisations and public health across the world. It is paramount for the EU to learn the lessons from COVID-19 and keep health a priority. However, we see a risk for public health to be de-prioritised on the political agenda.

It is essential that public health, including support to civil society organisations in accessing sustainable means of funding, is prioritised and adequately funded in the next MFF. The way EU funding is organised sets the priorities for the EU in the next years. The EU4Health programme should be continued in the next long-term budget of the EU, to address growing health challenges and truly implement an ambitious European Health Union. To name but a few of these challenges, health systems and the workforce are in crisis and should be supported by strong investments in order to face future crises and strengthen access to healthcare for citizens. The growing burden of non-communicable diseases is also an urgent issue to tackle by investing in prevention.

Providing ambitious investments for public health is aligned with the new European Commission's priority of competitiveness. Investing in a healthy Europe and focusing on wellbeing contributes to healthy societies and economy. While defence and security are a priority in the recent global context, it is relevant to note that health is also part of security concerns. Health is a pillar of democracy and should be considered as such when planning the EU's post-2027 long-term budget.

EPHA will develop advocacy activities around the MFF negotiations, especially by taking part in the activities organised by the EU4Health Civil Society Alliance, a network of over 30 health civil society organisations, whose secretariat is co-chaired by EPHA and the European Patients' Forum. The EU4Health Civil Society Alliance will focus on key messages for health to be considered in the upcoming MFF, among other activities.

In this month's EPHA's newsletter, we will focus on upcoming advocacy activities on the MFF, how to protect investments supporting public health policy, and addressing public health issues. We also explore the activities of the EU4Health Civil Society and look back to the event the network organised in the European Parliament on March 26th.

EPHA attended the first General Assembly of the Zero Hidden Hunger EU Horizon Project

The event brought together partners from across Europe to exchange insights from the different Work Packages (WPs), all working to tackle the pressing issue of hidden hunger, the often-overlooked burden of micronutrient deficiencies, increasingly exacerbated by an aging population, socio-demographic inequities, and the growing consumption of ultra-processed foods. We shared progress from WP9.2, which we are leading. Our focus is on reviewing existing macronutrient-related policies in Europe and setting up a Policy Lab to draw on evidence from academia, civil society, and other sectors to shape stronger, equity-driven nutrition policies.

Combatting Ethnic Disparities in Healthcare: A Case Study of Prostate and Breast Cancer

On 9 April, the European Public Health Alliance (EPHA) and the European Cancer Organisation (ECO) organised a webinar exploring ethnic health disparities through a lens of cancer inequities. Through two expert presentations on prostate and breast cancer respectively, followed by a panel discussion, the webinar explored ways to realise inclusive cancer care, and health equity more broadly. This was explored through a research, patient advocacy, and policy perspective.

The recording and more information can be found on the event page.

Concerns over the lack of information on the publication of the 2025 calls for operating grants under the EU4Health programme

The members of the EU4Health Civil Society Alliance ask in a new joint statement for transparent information on the operating grants for 2025 under the EU4Health programme. As of March 2025, no information is available on the operating grants supporting civil society for this year, although a framework partnership agreement has been organised for 2025 and 2026. This contributes to growing difficulties for health civil society organisations, and endangers their ability to implement their activities.

The statement asks for the operating grants, once available, to cover the activities retroactively from January until the end of the year. It also calls for funding opportunities for civil society organisations that were not eligible for the Framework Programme Agreements or could not apply.
